The epididymal luminal fluid of the caput epididymidis was incubated in the presence of cholera toxin, which allowed the measurement of the intracellular cAMP level and adenosine 3'5'-monophosphate-dependent protein kinase (cAMP-PK) activity. Treatment of the incubation medium with cAMP-PK increased the incorporation of [35S]methionine into a 70,000-Mr polypeptide associated with sperm maturation. When the medium was incubated in the presence of both cAMP-PK and FSH, the specific synthesis of the 70,000-Mr polypeptide was
